If your instructor tells you that you have problems with pronoun case, that means that you're using the incorrect forms of pronouns in sentences. In general, pronouns have three cases: subjective, objective, and possessive.

- Use the subjective case when the pronoun is the subject of a verb (the person or thing that is doing something).

- Use the objective case when the pronoun is the object of a verb (the person or thing to which something is being done) or is the object of a preposition (for, to, about, etc.).

- Use the possessive case when the pronoun is the possessor of something.
